

HUACHUCA CAVALCADE

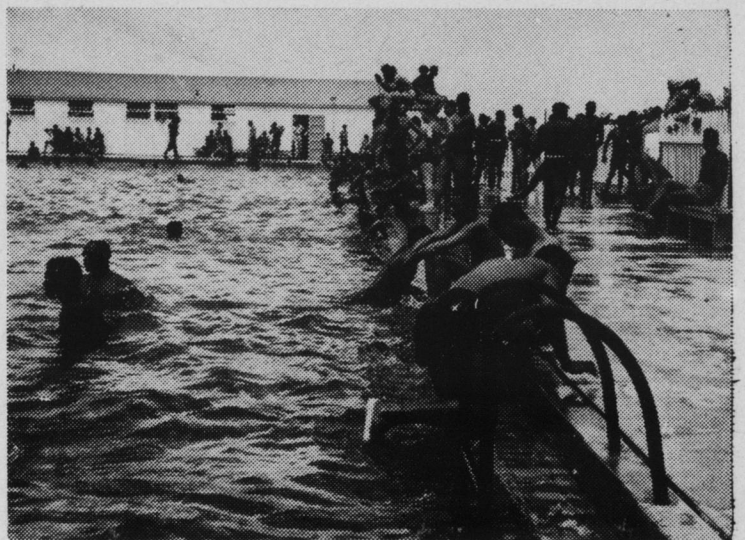

Major General Edward M. Almond commanded troops of the 92nd Division during training at Fort Huachuca.

Soldiers training at Fort Huachuca completed day-long hikes without leaving the reservation. They had their pick of terrain for hiking.

Brigadier General W. H. Colbern and his 92nd Division heavy artillery utilized a 45-mile-square gunnery range, leased for the purpose of their training.

A new 90 by 150 feet swimming pool gave thousands of soldiers their first opportunity to learn how to stay on top of the water.

Maneuver areas on the huge Post are plentiful and afforded opportunity for learning varied battle techniques.

The 827th Tank Destroyer battalion learned its weapons in Huachuca's mountains.

Recreation facilities are plentiful in barrack areas . . . ball diamonds, basket and volley ball courts, horse-shoe pits and tennis courts.
